1. Partnership and Project Summary

Project Name: The Sustainable Safety Initiative: Integrating Well-being into Workflow

Summary: This project aims to address the critical "Task vs. People" conflict identified in our pharmacy's operations. Currently, the pressure to meet "Excellence" (speed/volume) metrics is compromising the "Care" (staff's well-being) value, leading to burnout and potential safety risks. The initiative involves implementing a mandatory "Workflow & Wellness Huddle" at the start of every overlap shift. Unlike standard operational meetings which focus solely on targets, this huddle will explicitly assess team capacity and stress levels as a safety metric.

Desired Outcomes:

1. Reduce "Compassion Fatigue": By acknowledging staff state-of-mind, we aim to lower burnout rates and improve retention.
2. Maintain Zero-Error Rate: By treating a stressed technician as a "safety hazard" that requires support (rather than a slow worker who needs scolding), we prevent errors before they happen.
3. Cultural Shift: To move the pharmacy culture from "Speed at all costs" to "Safety through Sustainability," aligning the team's lived experience with the organization's value of "Care."

2. Stakeholder

In the above stakeholder map, OCP refers to Ontario College of Pharmacists, and FSM refers to Front Store Manager.

3. Stakeholder Assessment

A) Stakeholder Matrix

B) Stakeholder Perspectives

1. High Power / High Interest; Stakeholder: Pharmacy Associate/Owner

- What values does the stakeholder hold? Profitability, Operational Efficiency, Regulatory Compliance (OCP Standards), and Brand Reputation (Shoppers Drug Mart).
- What loyalties does the stakeholder have? Loyalty to Corporate Head Office (meeting volume quotas/metrics) and financial loyalty to the business's bottom line.
- By being a part of this coalition, what are the potential gains for the stakeholder?
Risk Mitigation: Reduced liability from medication errors caused by staff fatigue.
Cost Savings: Lower turnover costs (retention of trained staff) and fewer workflow bottlenecks caused by mistakes.
- By being a part of this coalition, what are the potential losses for the stakeholder?
Production Time: Loss of 10-15 minutes of "billable" time per day during the huddle.
Control: The need to potentially push back on corporate volume targets if the team signals they are at unsafe capacity.
- What value does the stakeholder bring to this collaborative effort? Authority & Resources. They are the only stakeholder with the power to officially sanction paid time for the huddles and enforce the policy change.

2. Low Power / High Interest; Stakeholder: Pharmacy Assistants

- What values does the stakeholder hold? Psychological Safety, Teamwork, Fairness, and Work-Life Balance.
- What loyalties does the stakeholder have? Loyalty to their immediate colleagues (the team) and to the patients they interact with face-to-face.
- By being a part of this coalition, what are the potential gains for the stakeholder?
Well-being: A structured, safe space to voice stress without fear of judgment, leading to reduced burnout and a more supportive environment.
- By being a part of this coalition, what are the potential losses for the stakeholder?
Vulnerability: The risk of being perceived as "weak" or "complaining" if they admit to stress, potentially fearing retaliation or judgment from management.

- What value does the stakeholder bring to this collaborative effort? The "Ground Truth." They provide the honest, real-time data on how the workflow is actually affecting safety and morale, which management often misses.

3. High Power / Low Interest; Stakeholder: Front Store Manager (FSM)

- What values does the stakeholder hold? Total Store Sales, Customer Experience (NPS Scores), and a cohesive store environment (visuals/audio).
- What loyalties does the stakeholder have? Loyalty to the District Manager and the broader "Front of Shop" sales targets.
- By being a part of this coalition, what are the potential gains for the stakeholder? Operational Harmony: A less stressed pharmacy team calls for "backup" less often, ensuring Front Store staff can remain on the floor driving sales.
- By being a part of this coalition, what are the potential losses for the stakeholder? Disruption: They may view the huddle as a distraction or "poor optics" if it delays the store's opening routine or if customers see staff "standing around."
- What value does the stakeholder bring to this collaborative effort? Environmental Control. They can agree to limit overhead paging or lower music volume during the huddle to ensure the pharmacy team can focus.

4. Low Power / Low Interest; Stakeholder: Casual Staff / Delivery Drivers

- What values does the stakeholder hold? Simplicity, Clarity of Tasks, and Timeliness.
- What loyalties does the stakeholder have? Loyalty to their specific shift schedule or task list rather than the long-term organizational culture.
- By being a part of this coalition, what are the potential gains for the stakeholder? Efficiency: Smoother handoffs (pickups/deliveries) because the core team is more organized and less frantic.
- By being a part of this coalition, what are the potential losses for the stakeholder? Confusion: Another "new policy" to learn that they might feel doesn't apply to them since they are not there every day.
- What value does the stakeholder bring to this collaborative effort? Objective Observation. Because they are not immersed in the daily stress, they can provide unbiased feedback on whether the "atmosphere" in the dispensary actually feels different after the initiative starts.

4. Insights

1. How does the information you gathered challenge your current behaviour? How will it change?

Analyzing the Pharmacy Associate's perspective challenges my tendency to view "safety" only as a technical check. I realized that to get the Associate on board, I cannot just talk about "feelings" (which I used to think was enough); I have to frame "wellness" as a business asset. My behavior will change from complaining about burnout to presenting a business case: "Investing 10 minutes in a huddle will save us hours in error reporting and retraining." I need to speak their language (Metrics/Risk) to get what my team needs (Care).

2. How did your organization's values conflict with those of your stakeholders? How will you navigate this conflict?

A conflict exists between the organization's stated value of "Care" and the Associate's need for "Efficiency/Profit." While the company says, "Live Life Well," the Associate is pressured by Head Office to cut hours and increase volume. I will navigate this by framing the "Wellness Huddle" as the solution to the efficiency problem, not the enemy of it. I will demonstrate that a well-supported team makes fewer mistakes, which ultimately protects the efficiency of the Associate values.

3. After completing the activities, what did you find most challenging about the process of analyzing your stakeholders?

The most challenging part was stepping into the shoes of the Front Store Manager (High Power/Low Interest). It is easy to ignore them because they don't work in the dispensary, but I realized they control the environment (music, interruptions, store pages) that affects our stress. It was hard to find a "gain" for them until I realized that a stressed pharmacy team calls for backup more often, pulling Front Store staff away from their duties.

4. What were significant "a-ha" moments you had during the process?

My "a-ha" moment was realizing that Pharmacy Assistants (Low Power/High Interest) are my most critical allies, even though they lack authority. I previously tried to fix things for them. The analysis showed me I need to build a coalition with them. If we all present a united front to the Associate about the benefits of the Huddle, our collective influence grows. I don't have to carry the burden of change alone.

5. Place yourself in the shoes of your stakeholders. What are elements beyond values and contributions that they should know about your organization?

They need to know that my "rigidity" (which they previously saw as intimidating) is actually a deep commitment to Sustainability. They need to understand that when I advocate for a "Wellness Huddle," I am not trying to get out of work; I am trying to build a system that allows us to work safely for the long haul. Knowledge of my true intent (Care via Safety) will enable them to trust my new initiatives rather than seeing them as resistance to workflow.
