

Engagement Summary Survey

Template

Dear Megan,

Thank you for agreeing to take a few minutes out of your day to help me to develop as a leader. I am completing this exercise as a part of the Engage Others course in the LEADS Inspired Leadership program. The responses collected on this survey are for my purposes only and will be kept confidential. I will review them to develop a summary of my strengths in relation to engaging others, then your specific responses will be discarded.

Please be honest, candid, and constructive with your responses. I am committed to growing as a leader and look forward to learning as much as possible about your perspective on my capabilities. I understand that the responses here are intended to help me grow.

To begin, please describe our relationship in a few words (e.g., supervisor, team member, colleague): Peer

May I contact you to discuss your responses further so that I may better understand and seek clarification? Y
If yes, please provide your name: Megan P.

Question	Response Be as detailed as possible in providing your response.	Rationale Provide a brief rationale (including examples where appropriate) to help me to understand your response.
What do you admire in my approach to work?	You are incredibly reliable. If you say you will do a shift or a task, it gets done 100%.	I admire that you never leave a mess for the next shift. Your station is always cleared and organized.
How could I improve on my skills in relation to working in our team?	You tend to go quiet and intense when the pressure is high.	It creates a bit of a tense atmosphere. If you communicated "I'm focusing now" instead of just going silent, it would help the vibe.
How would you describe my communication style to a new team member?	Precise and factual.	You don't waste words. It's efficient, but sometimes it lacks warmth.

How could I improve my collaboration skills?	Be more open to feedback or alternative ways of doing things.	Sometimes you stick very strictly to the "textbook" way, even if a colleague has a faster, safe method.
--	---	---

Thank you for your feedback.

Sincerely,
Shreyansh S

Engagement Summary Survey

Template

Dear Dev,

Thank you for agreeing to take a few minutes out of your day to help me to develop as a leader. I am completing this exercise as a part of the Engage Others course in the LEADS Inspired Leadership program. The responses collected on this survey are for my purposes only and will be kept confidential. I will review them to develop a summary of my strengths in relation to engaging others, then your specific responses will be discarded.

Please be honest, candid, and constructive with your responses. I am committed to growing as a leader and look forward to learning as much as possible about your perspective on my capabilities. I understand that the responses here are intended to help me grow.

To begin, please describe our relationship in a few words (e.g., supervisor, team member, colleague): Pharmacy Manager

May I contact you to discuss your responses further so that I may better understand and seek clarification? Y
If yes, please provide your name: Dev B.

Question	Response Be as detailed as possible in providing your response.	Rationale Provide a brief rationale (including examples where appropriate) to help me to understand your response.
What do you admire in my approach to work?	Your commitment to patient safety and regulatory compliance is absolute.	I never have to worry about a technical check you've performed. You catch errors others miss because you refuse to rush.
How could I improve on my skills in relation to working in our team?	You could trust the assistants to handle the workflow more, rather than trying to control every step yourself.	Sometimes you bottleneck the workflow because you double-check things that don't require a double check.
How would you describe my communication style to a new team member?	Direct, formal, and authoritative.	When the queue gets long, you tend to take over. Asking the team "How should we split this up?" would build more trust.

How could I improve my collaboration skills?	Involve the team in problem-solving rather than just issuing the final decision.	When the queue gets long, you tend to take over. Asking the team "How should we split this up?" would build more trust.
--	--	---

Thank you for your feedback.

Sincerely,
Shreyansh S

Engagement Summary Survey

Template

Dear Rutvi,

Thank you for agreeing to take a few minutes out of your day to help me to develop as a leader. I am completing this exercise as a part of the Engage Others course in the LEADS Inspired Leadership program. The responses collected on this survey are for my purposes only and will be kept confidential. I will review them to develop a summary of my strengths in relation to engaging others, then your specific responses will be discarded.

Please be honest, candid, and constructive with your responses. I am committed to growing as a leader and look forward to learning as much as possible about your perspective on my capabilities. I understand that the responses here are intended to help me grow.

To begin, please describe our relationship in a few words (e.g., supervisor, team member, colleague): Team member

May I contact you to discuss your responses further so that I may better understand and seek clarification? Y
If yes, please provide your name: Rutvi P.

Question	Response Be as detailed as possible in providing your response.	Rationale Provide a brief rationale (including examples where appropriate) to help me to understand your response.
What do you admire in my approach to work?	You are very fair. You treat everyone the same regardless of who they are.	You don't play favorites with the schedule or tasks, which we really appreciate.
How could I improve on my skills in relation to working in our team?	When mistakes happen, your feedback can feel a bit punitive or critical.	I know you care about safety, but sometimes it feels like we are being scolded rather than taught.
How would you describe my communication style to a new team member?	Serious and by-the-book.	I would tell a new hire to make sure they follow procedure exactly around you.

How could I improve my collaboration skills?	Check in on us personally a bit more.	We know you are busy, but sometimes it feels like you don't notice if we are stressed or having a bad day.
--	---------------------------------------	--

Thank you for your feedback.

Sincerely,
Shreyansh S

Generating Insights

Template

Element	Guiding Question	Response
What?	What does the collected data from each of the respondents say?	The data reveals a strong consensus on my technical reliability. All three respondents (Pharmacy Manager, Peer, and Team Member) identified my commitment to safety, accuracy, and fairness as my primary strengths. They trust my work implicitly. However, a consistent theme emerged regarding my interpersonal style. 1. The Team Member noted that my feedback on errors feels "punitive" or "scolding," even though I intend to be educational. 2. The Peer described me as "intense" and "quiet" under pressure, which creates a tense atmosphere. 3. The Pharmacy Manager suggested I need to delegate more effectively and involve the team in problem-solving rather than just issuing directives. Overall, the data says I am viewed as a highly competent technician but a rigid and somewhat intimidating leader who prioritizes tasks over people.
So what?	What does this collected data indicate to me about my capabilities as a leader? The response to this question is an insight on your capabilities as a leader.	Insight on My Capabilities: This data exposes a gap between my intent (to be fair) and my impact (appearing rigid). 1. The Hidden Value: My compassion is currently "hidden." Because I don't verbalize my support or explain the "why" behind my decisions, the team interprets my silence as strictness rather than focus. 2. Managing vs. Leading: I am effective at managing tasks (clearing the queue), but I am struggling to lead people. By focusing so hard on accountability, I have made the team feel unsafe to ask questions—which ironically creates the very safety risks I want to avoid. 3. Solid Foundation: On the positive side, my technical competence is trusted. I have a strong foundation to build on; I do not need to fix my work ethic, only my communication style.

Now what?	Based on the insights, how will you change your behaviour as a leader?	Action Plan for Behaviour Change: Based on these insights, I will implement three specific changes aligned with my Self-Development Plan: 1. Verbalize the "Why": To counter the "rigid" perception, I will explain the safety rationale behind my decisions. Instead of a simple "No," I will link my actions to regulatory standards, ensuring the team understands it is about safety, not criticism. 2. Humanize the Interaction: To address the "intense" feedback, I will start a daily "Wellness Check-in." Simply asking, "How are you handling the pace?" signals that I see them as people, not just production units. 3. Shift to Curiosity: To fix the "punitive" dynamic, I will adopt a "Systems-First" approach to errors. Asking, "Did the workflow make this difficult?" demonstrates fairness and focuses on solutions rather than blame.

Summary of Engagement

Top Priority for Development: My top priority is to bridge the gap between my technical competence and my interpersonal impact. Currently, I am operating as a high-performing "manager of tasks"—ensuring safety, accuracy, and efficiency—but I am failing to act as a "leader of people." My focus must shift from simply enforcing standards to actively fostering the psychological safety of my team. I need to ensure that my commitment to accountability does not come at the cost of approachability.

Differences in Perception: A distinct difference exists in how my leadership is viewed up and down the hierarchy. My pharmacy manager views my rigidity primarily as a workflow issue—noting that my refusal to delegate creates bottlenecks. In contrast, my team member views that same rigidity as a personal or emotional issue, interpreting my directness as "scolding" or "punitive."

These differences likely stem from my lack of verbal communication. Because I do not explicitly narrate the "why" behind my decisions, each group projects their own context onto my silence. The pharmacy manager sees a lack of trust in the system, while the team member sees a lack of empathy for the person.

What Surprised Me Most: I was most surprised by the feedback that my correction of errors feels "punitive." Internally, I view my interventions as strictly educational and rooted in Fairness—I correct errors to protect the patient and the license of the staff member. It was a shock to realize that without an explicit layer of compassion (e.g., asking about the workflow first), my objective "fairness" is experienced by others as subjective "harshness." I realized that intent means very little if the impact is intimidating.

Acting on the Feedback: I will begin acting on this feedback immediately by altering my communication patterns in the dispensary.

1. Humanizing the Space: I will implement a daily "Wellness Check-in," asking team members how they are managing the pace before I start issuing tasks.
2. Reframing Correction: When addressing errors, I will adopt a "System-First" approach. By asking, "Did the workflow make this difficult?" before discussing the mistake, I will prove that my goal is improvement, not punishment.
3. Verbalizing Rationale: I will practice explaining the safety or regulatory reason behind my decisions out loud, ensuring my team understands that my "no" is professional, not personal.